Description

The Arab Innovation Network (AIN) is a volunteer-run initiative that aims to foster innovation in the Arab World by encouraging youth to direct their knowledge, skills, and resources towards industry-relevant innovation.

AIN seeks to do this by:

- engaging with young people across the Arab world online and offline to generate enthusiasm around innovation and entrepreneurship
- working directly with industrial partners to set structured challenges for youth to address
- providing a unique transition for talented young candidates from university to employment, by working with partners to offer internships, networking opportunities and training.

AIN is a registered charity in the UK and a member of the Arab-British Chamber of Commerce. We collaborate with a number of reputable Arab universities and organisations in the Middle East and North Africa; and we have strong ties to international academic institutions such as the University of Cambridge.
